In the annals of aerial warfare, no story is more gripping than that of the Australian Flying Corps (AFC) during World War I. Australian Hawk Over The Western Front tells the extraordinary tale of these brave pilots and their remarkable achievements against overwhelming odds.

Formed in 1912, the AFC was initially tasked with defending Australia's vast coastline. However, with the outbreak of war in Europe, the AFC was quickly deployed to the Western Front, where they would play a vital role in the Allied air campaign.

Despite being outnumbered and outgunned, the AFC pilots quickly gained a reputation for their skill and determination. They were instrumental in the development of new aerial combat tactics, and they accounted for a significant number of enemy aircraft shot down.

Australian Hawk Over The Western Front tells the stories of some of the most famous AFC pilots, including Sir Ross Smith, the first man to fly from England to Australia; Sir Charles Kingsford Smith, the first man to fly across the Pacific Ocean; and Captain Harry Butler, the highest-scoring Australian ace of the war.

These are just a few of the many brave men who served in the AFC during World War I. Their stories are a testament to the courage, sacrifice, and triumph of the Australian spirit.

Australian Hawk Over The Western Front is a must-read for anyone interested in the history of aviation, World War I, or the ANZAC spirit. It is a gripping and inspiring account of a remarkable group of men who played a vital role in one of the most important conflicts in history.
