The History of the Battle

The battle between Goku and Piccolo took place in the final episode of the original Dragon Ball series, which aired in Japan on February 12, 1986. By this point, Goku had already defeated a number of powerful enemies, including the Red Ribbon Army, King Piccolo, and Tao Pai Pai. However, Piccolo was a different kind of opponent altogether. He was a Namekian, a race of powerful and long-lived aliens, and he was determined to conquer the Earth.

The battle began with Goku and Piccolo exchanging blows, but it quickly became clear that Piccolo was the stronger fighter. He was able to easily overpower Goku with his superior strength and speed, and he even managed to break Goku's arm.

However, Goku was able to turn the tide of the battle by using his signature Kamehameha wave. Piccolo was able to block the blast, but it weakened him enough for Goku to land a finishing blow.

The defeat of Piccolo was a major turning point in the Dragon Ball series. It showed that Goku was not invincible, and it set the stage for the of even more powerful villains in the future.
