Walsh's personal connection to MS began in 1981 when his six-year-old son, Adam, was diagnosed with the disease. MS is a chronic, autoimmune disease that affects the central nervous system. It can cause a wide range of symptoms, including fatigue, muscle weakness, numbness, and vision problems.

When Adam was diagnosed, there was no cure for MS. But Walsh was determined to find one. He began working with doctors and researchers to learn more about the disease. He also became a tireless advocate for MS research funding.

In 1992, Walsh founded the Adam Walsh Child Resource Center, a non-profit organization that provides support and resources to families of missing and exploited children. The center also funds research into MS.

Walsh's work has helped to raise awareness of MS and to increase funding for research. He has also been a source of hope and inspiration to others who are living with MS.
